Question: 1

A manufacturing plant needs a consistent process for reporting equipment defects and converting approved requests into corrective maintenance orders. Configure the process so planners can record the malfunction, plan the required work, execute the repair, and document the results.

A. See the Explanation.

Answer: A

Explanation:

Configure an appropriate maintenance notification type with the required catalogs, priorities, partner functions, and field controls. Ensure that the affected equipment or functional location can be assigned to the notification. Define the integration between the notification and the relevant maintenance order type. Test creating the notification, recording damage and cause data, and generating an order. Plan the operations, materials, labor, and dates in the order before releasing it. Complete the confirmations, record the technical findings, technically complete the order, and close the notification after verifying the repair.

Question: 2

A critical production machine has stopped unexpectedly, and the maintenance team must begin repairs immediately without completing a lengthy planning process. Configure and execute an emergency maintenance process that records the breakdown and restores the machine quickly.

A. See the Explanation.

Answer: A

Explanation:

Create an emergency maintenance notification or use the simplified emergency maintenance application with the affected technical object. Record the malfunction start time, breakdown indicator, damage, priority, and immediate safety information. Create or select the appropriate emergency maintenance order and enter only the essential operations, components, and responsible work center. Release the order so technicians can begin work immediately. After the repair, confirm labor and materials, record the malfunction end time and downtime, and document the cause and repair. Technically complete and settle the order after verifying that the equipment is operational.

Question: 3

A planner must prepare a maintenance order for a pump overhaul and ensure that labor, tools, spare parts, and execution dates are available before work starts. Configure and validate the order-planning process.

A. See the Explanation.

Answer: A

Explanation:

Create the maintenance order with the correct equipment, order type, maintenance activity type, priority, planner group, and main work center. Add operations with realistic durations, work requirements, control keys, and relationships. Assign required spare parts as order components and verify their availability or procurement status. Add production resources and tools when they are needed. Schedule the order and review capacity requirements at the assigned work centers. Confirm that planned dates, material reservations, estimated costs, and resource requirements are correct before releasing the order for execution.

Question: 4

A maintenance operation requires a specialist contractor because the necessary skill is unavailable internally. Configure the maintenance order so the external service can be procured, received, and charged to the order.

A. See the Explanation.

Answer: A

Explanation:

Add an externally processed operation to the maintenance order and select a control key that permits external processing. Enter the purchasing organization, purchasing group, material group, service description, quantity, price, and expected delivery information. Verify that releasing the order creates the required purchase requisition. Convert the requisition into a purchase order and send it to the approved supplier. After the contractor completes the work, post the service entry sheet or goods receipt and complete invoice verification. Confirm that the external cost appears on the maintenance order and complete the order after accepting the service.
